

Letters

Dear S&S,

In response to Val Falloon's letter in the last issue of S&S I would like to say that Val Falloon made many mis-statements of fact, and untrue allegations, and I would now like to put the record straight: the book How To Get More Clients has not been withdrawn from sale, is not the subject of legal action, and is not the subject of legal proceedings. These statements are easy for outsiders to check. She also made a number of other damaging allegations about me and the way we conducted business together which are completely untrue. There is much I could say to voice my side of the story; however, I do not wish to enter into a debate or mud-slinging match in this or any other publication. Disputes between authors and publishers are best left to the existing mechanisms for dealing with such matters.

Mike Considine, Brainwave

We would like to apologise to Mike Considine and Brainwave for publishing Val's letter without first checking all the facts. According to information we now have to hand, we believe that many of the allegations made in that letter were without foundation; in partial recompense we are pleased to include information about How To Get More Clients in our advertising section.

We reserve the right to cut long letters where appropriate, so please keep them brief!

Famous Last Words

Fritz Perls was in hospital having had a severe heart attack. His last words, according to those who were with him, were: 'Nobody tells me what to do'. He then turned over and died.

S&S invites readers to submit the (imagined) last words of any psychologist, living or deceased. Please send them to the editorial address listed in the front cover, by Christmas please. We will print the most apt or amusing contributions and a prize will be awarded for the one we like best.
