A REBIRTH

UNE RENAISSANCE

WIEDERGEBURT

Beginning with this issue, Self and Society is now the official journal of the European Association for Humanistic Psychology.

Self and Society has always welcomed contributions from overseas, but from now on we shall be actively encouraging its development as a European forum for the human potential movement. This will bring about changes in content. We hope that the diversity of work within the field of humanistic psychology in the different European countries will be reflected in the articles we publish and that the wider exposure to different approaches and techniques will lead to still greater interest and energy.

At the same time Self and Society will remain essentially a channel for communication open to those involved in the movement, in whatever capacity. The personal statement (in prose or poetry) will still be welcomed as well as the extensively researched article. Both surely have their value and justify their space. High standards will be encouraged, but with the recognition that the perception of excellence is not consistent from person to person and time to time.

We hope our present subscribers will continue to be stimulated by Self and Society in its extended role. And we very much hope our readers will approve this widening of our boundaries.

To anyone subscribing for the first time at the European Conference and to all our readers . . . . Welcome! Bienvenue! Willkommen!
